

Duo Dickinson, FAIA

Graduating from Cornell in 1977, Duo Dickinson opened his own architectural practice in 1987.

His work has received more than 30 awards and is a Fellow in the American Institute of Architects. Twenty to thirty percent of his ongoing work is dedicated to pro bono or at-cost work for not-for-profits, totaling over 75 projects for over 30 organizations over the last 30 years.

His design work has been published in more than 70 publications, he is the architecture writer for Connecticut Hearst Media Corp. and a staff feature writer for The Common Edge Collaborative and Mockingbird Ministries. He is a regular contributor to Arch Daily and has written for Archinect and many of other publications. His blog, Saved By Design has received over 100,000 hits in the last few years.

Dickinson has written eight books. His latest book, A Home Called New England, published by Pequot Globe was nominated for a 2018 CT Book Award and he is active in radio and media. He hosts the radio series “Home Page” on WPKN Radio.

Dickinson has taught at Yale College and Roger Williams University. He is now on the faculty of the Building Beauty program at the Sant’Anna Institute, Sorrento, Italy as well as co-chair of their American Advisor Board and is teaching at the University of Hartford. He has served on numerous design juries and has lectured at numerous universities, associations and groups.